

Joint Ventures & Strategic Alliances

Strong Links

For companies looking to expand into new geographic markets or business lines, acquisitions or organic growth may prove too cumbersome or time consuming. Joint ventures and strategic alliances can often allow enterprises to quickly meet their business goals without the costs of internal development or external acquisition and without many of the risks of single-handed expansion. We help clients in combining their expertise in core capabilities, geographic presence, and ownership of specific technologies with other compatible entities.

Reach

Industrial Matchmaking

We represent entities in the formation of domestic and international joint ventures and strategic alliances in a broad range of industries, including telecommunications, media, financial services, manufacturing, food and beverage, health care, and pharmaceuticals. Many of our clients are businesses seeking external partners for growth capital or cutting-edge products and technology, while others are in possession of financial capital or innovative intellectual property and wish to collaborate with local partners to access new markets. We also advise on technology pooling and joint development agreements, where parties combine existing research and development efforts to create and exploit new products and technologies.

Approach

Avoiding Common Pitfalls

Our attorneys are well versed in the structural and tax planning issues surrounding ventures and alliances, and assist in developing workable governance mechanisms. Especially important in industries where the players are few, we can advise on avoiding or mitigating the antitrust and competition law issues among actual or potential competitors. Our experience has made us aware of the inherent risks associated with such business arrangements. We help clients increase the likelihood of success, and in the event parties decide to part ways, we lay the groundwork for an orderly exit.
